

PEOPLE PREVENT POLLUTION

A WORKSHOP SERIES ABOUT MUNICIPAL GOOD HOUSEKEEPING

Taking care of your community includes taking care of the water that flows through it. Learn how you can do your part to keep our rivers clean through everyday activities on the job.

Workshops, designed for municipal maintenance staff and their supervisors, will be offered in three locations, making it easy for you to attend.

Register today for one or more of these free workshops.

Spill prevention and response around the garage

In just an hour, learn simple steps to preventing dangerous spills that could pollute our drinking water and streams. And in the event of a spill, Denny Bristow, an expert in spill response, also will show you the best way to clean it up.

Presenter:

Denny Bristow
Dayton Regional Hazardous
Materials Response Team

Monday, March 8, 2010

Too much of a good thing: Pesticide & fertilizer application

A healthy turf grass crop is a thing of beauty. You can make it happen without losing excess fertilizer and pesticide as runoff into the nearest stream. Roger Bender, Suzanne Mills-Wasniak, and Latham Fraley from The Ohio State University Extension will help you get ready for a truly “green” season of baseball and soccer fields, front lawns, and cemeteries. Free soil test included for those in attendance.

Erosion and sediment control on linear construction sites

Linear construction sites like roadways, bridges, and trails bring about a unique set of challenges to preventing erosion. Join us for an uncommon common-sense discussion about good habits that will protect fish habitat and make our worksites neat and tidy, too.

Presenter:

Dan Taphorn
Hamilton County Soil & Water
Conservation District
